Boardwalk Bridge Finished, Open, Now Owned by City

by Caroline Hanks

The boardwalk bridge over the pond and wetlands is the latest addition to the trail connecting Cherrywood Lane with the Greenbelt Station South Core Development. Completion of the boardwalk has opened it for public use; however, a ceremonial opening for the bridge is currently in the planning stages, with the Greenbelt City Council hoping to schedule a day when the weather turns warmer.

The trail can be accessed on Cherrywood Lane (head north off of Greenbelt Road) across from the Shell gas station. According to council meeting minutes from March 29, 2017, the addition connects Cherrywood Lane, Beltway Plaza and the Greenbelt Station development. A sign at the Cherrywood Lane trail entrance states “Future Trail Location” and claims estimated completion of the project to be July 2017.

As of December 2017, council accepted the boardwalk addition and officially took ownership of the land where the trail sits after years of planning with Woodlawn Development Group (WDG) and official processing with the developer and the state.

The removal of “Concrete Mountain” created the need for the boardwalk bridge because of the pond set in its place. Concrete Mountain was a stockpile of waste left over from a concrete manufacturer mixing plant.

Following the planning and permit approval by the Maryland State Board of Public Works in January 2017, WDG started moving wooden planks for the boardwalk onto the land in February 2017 to begin the construction process of the trail. The developer was required to set specific limits of disturbance before starting the bridge’s construction to assess and constrain the physical impact of the construction on the environment.

Mayor Emmett Jordan appealed to Maryland State Senator Paul Pinsky on behalf of the city in April 2016 to obtain an easement through the Board of Public Works for the state-owned land that the trail was proposed to traverse. An easement would permit state-owned land to be used for

by Kathleen Gallagher

It wasn’t the first time the Greenbelt City Council had met over the years with representatives of the Beltsville Agricultural Research Center (BARC) to discuss potential changes to the campus of “the farm” that forms the city’s northern boundary and is cherished by Greenbelters as a significant part of what remains of the city’s “green belt.” Efforts to chip away at BARC land have persisted for more than 50 years, and the most disturbing threats have involved federal legislation to enable selling the property in whole or in part.

On February 7, councilmembers met with Dr. Howard Zhang, director of BARC, Gary Mayo, legislative affairs officer for the Agricultural Research Service and Chuck Davis, supervisory facility engineer with the Bureau of Engraving and Printing (BEP).

Davis currently has a second title as the project manager for an intended relocation of the currency production functions of BEP. The BARC campus is not the only federal property under consideration for the move, but at this time it is BEP’s first choice, due to location and other factors.

BARC Welcomes Proposal

Although it wasn’t the first time the city council has been involved in such discussions, what was a first, at least in this reporter’s memory, was that the proposed plan not only has strong support from the U.S. Department of Agriculture and BARC administration, but also appears to have potential to gather council support as well.

BEP falls under the U.S. Department of the Treasury and is located at 14th and C Streets S.W., D.C. Its website uses the whimsical address of moneyfactory.gov. It occupies a main building built in 1914 and an annex building built in 1938. Together, with a second location in

Ft. Worth, Texas, the Washington facility designs and prints all the notes (paper money) for the Federal Reserve, as well as a long list of other security products for the federal government. The main building has long been inadequate and inefficient as a modern production facility.

The project goal is to construct a smaller, more efficient facility, preferably on an existing federal property, to reduce the government’s footprint. The Annex Building, which occupies an entire D.C. block, would be surplus and sold. The main building would be modernized and used for BEP administrative functions, as well as providing space for other federal agencies. About 400 of their staff of 1,200 would remain downtown. The industrial and production operations would move to the new location.

According to Davis, the discussions are all just informal now, with “lots of legislation to get through” before the project could move forward.

People’s Home Movies Bring Old Greenbelt Back to Life

by Janice Wolf

“That’s my baby!” Greenbelter Beasy Sanders exclaimed, moving in closer to the monitor showing footage of her then-6-month-old daughter splashing around in a bathtub, film she hadn’t seen in years. She laughed, recalling old memories like her baby’s first Christmas in their Berwyn Heights rambler, as onlookers called out the names of familiar old toys like the Fisher-Price corn popper push toy and a Busy Box that were seen in the film.

She was not the only one riding a wave of nostalgia Saturday at the Makerspace, the scene of Home Media Digitization Day(s). The weekend event, sponsored by the Old Greenbelt Theatre, reunited around two dozen people with distant memories, which in some cases included ancestors whom they had only seen in still photographs, and had never seen walking and talking.

“I heard my great-grandmother speaking for the first time,” said Liz Wells, a former Greenbelt resident who now lives on the Eastern Shore.

What did she say?

“She said ‘Don’t film me’ while shaking her head, so my father panned the camera away from her. Slowly.” Her father, St. Clair “Skeeter” Reeves, was a former mayor of College Park, and the film rolls she hadn’t looked at in 45 years also contain footage she thought might be of interest to that community as well as to her family.

In fact, the idea for hosting this event, said Old Greenbelt Theatre’s (OGT) Executive Director Caitlin McGrath, came from requests the theater often gets from people looking to convert home movies on 8- or 16-mm film and VHS or Betamax to a digital format. “Naturally, they would ask us – we’re a theater!” McGrath added. James and Addie Hill came from Upper Marlboro on Saturday; they had been directed to the OGT by the Prince George’s County Library; they called McGrath, and as luck and timing would have it were able to reserve a slot for this one-time event.

In talking to people from the area, McGrath said, it became apparent that many of these weren’t just home movies, but in fact period snapshots with oral histories of Greenbelt and its residents going back decades. Mining hundreds of yards of old film tucked away in attics and not viewed for decades might also bring forth never-before-seen-or-heard moments in time that could be archived for use in future historical film projects for the city and

Letters to the Editor

Maglev Doubts Abound

Maglev proponents not only have under-informed us, their information has been misleading. Let's start with Governor Hogan. Hogan's Secretary of the Department of Transportation wrote in an October 14, 2017, letter, "It has always been the understanding of the Hogan administration that this proposed project would only use existing rights-of-ways intended for these types of purposes." The letter proclaims, "The Hogan administration, in regards to using existing rights-of-way for this proposed project, has not and never will change." Are BARC, Greenbelt Forest Preserve and Patuxent Wildlife Refuge, "intended for these types of purposes?" The maglev maps say so.

Maglev proponents like to hint this train will be paid for by others – not taxpayers. Yet all the billions borrowed from Japan and FRA will need to be repaid back by the taxpayers. Maglev proponents like to describe this as a green project. However, being powered by electricity implies coal-powered, i.e. fossil fuels.

There is the suggestion that the train will go to New York or Boston, yet Connecticut and Rhode Island have blocked the maglev in their states. It has not been approved by New York or Pennsylvania as yet. It is worth noting that, according to an op-ed in the Washington Post, "the maglev has been rejected by European countries."

Is this project financially viable? According to Wikipedia, a statement from the Shanghai Maglev Transportation Company in 2007, stated that the "Company would lose 500 million to 700 million RMB every year." According to Dennis Brady of Bowie's Citizens Against The SCMaglev (CATS), the maglev financially failed in Germany so the German government stepped in to save it but after years of heavy subsidies they finally gave up. They are now dismantling the maglev and bridges and selling off the parts.

With all this in mind, I went out to the Sunrise Forest Preserve in Greenbelt East, the forest that was saved by the intervention of Greenbelt East citizens. I pondered this: maglev's "proven technology" has never been proven underground. Moreover, this unproven technology has never rocketed under homes and businesses before. I wonder if the maglev proponents have made any attempt to inform the over 5000 residents of Windsor Green, Huntington Ridge, Greenbriar or Greenspring about what could be roaring under their properties. I wonder how residents in Greenbelt East feel about the foundations of their homes, apartments and businesses being tunneled under by a 300-mph train beneath them. Are they concerned about the future values of their properties?

In a joint letter signed by Senator Paul Pinsky and Delegates Alonzo Washington, Tawanna Gaines and Anne Healey, they write, "possible exposure to radiation concerns us." At a recent Greenbelt Advocates for Environmental and Social Justice event, County Councilmember Todd Turner said, "For lack of a better term we are the guinea pigs." At the same event, City Councilmember Colin Byrd said "This train is all pain and no gain."

Concerned? There's action you can take: attend the upcoming event hosted by Greenbelt Advocates for Environmental Justice and Social Justice: Saturday, March 3 at 10 to 3 p.m., at the Greenbriar Community Center. Be heard!

Love, War and Horror

Three new critically acclaimed movies come to the Old Greenbelt Theatre this Friday, February 23: Dunkirk, Phantom Thread and Get Out.

Written and directed by Christopher Nolan and featuring an ensemble cast of stars – Tom Hardy, Mark Rylance, Kenneth Branagh, Harry Styles, Cillian Murphy – Dunkirk depicts the rescue/escape of 330,000 French, British, Belgian and Dutch soldiers from the harbor and beaches of Dunkirk, France, in late May and early June of 1940. "This is a pile-driver of a movie, dropping one visual and aural bomb after another," one critic says.

Rating PG 13 Running time 1 hour 46 min

Written and directed by Paul Thomas Anderson, Phantom Thread stars the incomparable Daniel Day-Lewis in his farewell movie role (purportedly) as Reynolds Woodcock, confirmed bachelor and rigidly meticulous celebrity couturier in 1950's London. His sister and business partner Cyril (Lesley Manville) aids Reynolds in controlling ingenue model Alma (Vicky Krieps).

But just what is the nature of the mysterious Reynolds/Alma partnership? Pygmalion/Galatea? "Is this a collaboration or a competition? A tennis match or a tango?" one critic asks.

Rating R Running Time 2 hours 10 min

Written and directed by Jordan Peele, Get Out is part romantic comedy, but more sci fi horror and acute racial commentary. Chris (Daniel Kaluuya) is the black boyfriend of white Rose (Allison Williams) who nervously goes to meet her parents, the very accommodating Bradley Whitford and Catherine Keener. But behind the smiles, under the liberal veneer, things don't just get curiouser and curiouser; they get downright deadly.

Golden Age Club

Despite bad weather that canceled two meetings, the Golden Age Club has had some enjoyable get-togethers this winter. Attendance at the birthday luncheons has been higher than ever, and the January and February speakers’ sessions (always the second Wednesday of each month) were especially interesting.

In January, City Manager Nicole Ard introduced herself to the group and told about her work and future plans for the city.

In February, three members of FREED (Female RE-Enactors of Distinction), including our own corresponding secretary Joyce Bailey, dressed in costume to portray three different characters, each one an African-American woman who lived during the Civil War years. The roles were based on research the women had done on the lives of the real women they portrayed. A story and photos will be published in a future issue of the News Review.

The next big event coming up for the club is the annual banquet, to be held Wednesday, April 18 at the College Park Holiday Inn. Reservations are already being taken by Joan Baker, head of the banquet committee. Dues for 2018 must be paid in order to get the discounted club price. Members should pay their dues by March 7 to be sure of having their name in the 2018 directory, which will be distributed at the banquet. For further information, call Joan Baker at 301-345-2917 or membership chairman Kathleen McFarland at 301-474-6892.

New members are always welcome. Drop in at any meeting, Wednesdays from 11:00 a.m. to noon, in the Multipurpose Room of the Community Center.

Greenbelt Arts Center Presents Angel Street

The Greenbelt Arts Center will present Angel Street, written by Patrick Hamilton, throughout March. Better known in the U.S. as Gaslight, the play takes place in 1880 in an old Victorian house in London. Mr. Manningham is slowly trying to drive his wife insane (her mother died of insanity) by playing demonic tricks on her. One evening when Mr. Manningham is out, Inspector Rough calls and during the course of the evening convinces Mrs. Manningham that her husband murdered a woman in this house 15 years ago for her jewels, and that these jewels have never been found.

The title Gaslight derives from the telltale flickering of the gas lamps in the house. But the term ‘gaslighting’ has come to represent a form of emotional abuse by undermining victims’ confidence by calling their credibility and sanity into question.

The production will run on Friday and Saturday evenings March 2, 3, 9, 10, 16, 17, 23 and 24 at 8 p.m. with Sunday matinees on March 11 and 18 at 2 p.m.

Obituaries

Dorothy Gaffney

Dorothy Marie Gaffney of Riverdale, age 93, died on Saturday, February 17, 2018. Born in Guttenberg, N.J., on April 17, 1924, to Jennie and Thomas McMahon, she grew up in a happy, loving family with her older sisters Kay and Gen, and younger brother Tom.

She married Joseph Gaffney on June 8, 1947. They resettled in Greenbelt with their two children in 1950, where they continued to raise their growing family and came to cherish and love their new hometown. She also enjoyed her sales receptionist job at Greenbelt Homes Inc. from 1971 to 1981. A devout Catholic, she attended Mass at St. Hugh's, and sent her children to the St. Hugh's Parish school.

In 1980, the Gaffneys bought their last home on a five-acre lot in Riverdale, creating "The Gaffney Compound." Mrs. Gaffney enjoyed hosting family and friends there for over 35 years.

Mrs. Gaffney is survived by her brother Tom and her seven children, Patricia (Paul) Mylander, Maureen (Theodore White) Gaffney, Janet (James) Berard, Michael (Melissa) Gaffney, Nancy (Harold) Domchick, Maryanne (John) Hossick and Eileen Gaffney, and by grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

On Wednesday February 21, she was buried at Greenbelt Cemetery on Ivy Lane after a final Mass at St. Hugh's Catholic Church. For those wishing to make a charitable donation in her name, the family suggests Catholic Charities or St. Hugh's Catholic Church.

Condolences to the family and friends of Dorothy Gaffney, who died on February 17. She and her family lived in Greenbelt from 1950 to 1980, when they moved to Riverdale.

Congratulations to the boys and undefeated girls Eleanor Roosevelt High School swim teams, who won the Regional Championships on Saturday, February 17. The previous weekend both teams won the Prince George's County Championship swim meet. This is the girls' 19th year in a row winning the county championship.

Congratulations to three Greenbelt teachers who were honored this week as National Board Certified Teachers at a ceremony at Charles Herbert Flowers High School. Jasmine Giddings of Springhill Lake Elementary School and Audrey Ruoff of Eleanor Roosevelt High School were newly certified, and Anna Maria Cherubin of Eleanor Roosevelt High School was recertified.

Please share your accomplishments, milestones and news in the Our Neighbors column. Send details of your news items to editor@greenbeltnewsreview.com.

demonstrate opposition to the two remaining B-W Parkway routes being considered for the project. People traveled many miles to get to the rally and one of the activists from Beacon Heights even chartered a bus so several, who otherwise may not have been able to attend, could get to the rally. Recently, many people who oppose the train, but were unable to attend the rally, wrote letters to elected officials. We (Greenbelt Advocates for Environmental and Social Justice) collected these letters at our recent January 20 SCMaglev opposition event. At the Annapolis rally, several people came prepared to speak. Our voices were heard and made a powerful presence. For those unable to attend the rally I would like to share my speech, which is directed to our elected officials:

"I am here tonight to ask the decision makers to support the NO BUILD option. If the SC-Maglev project moves forward it will hurt a lot of people. It will change the character of our neighborhoods. Many of these neighborhoods are already impacted by noise, development and the loss of green space. Some of these neighborhoods are historic landmarks. I say, leave these neighborhoods, wooded areas, green spaces alone. There is very little left of the natural environment in urban areas and we ask that it be left alone. We ask not just for ourselves and our children, but we ask for the wildlife that have no say in these decisions as we continue to destroy and take from them, their precious habitat."

CDCG Works with Greenbriar To Promote Greenbelt One

by Matthew Arbach

The Center for Dynamic Community Governance (CDCG) is going strong in their “year-long project focused on bringing awareness of free and low-cost Greenbelt services and programs to the residents of Greenbriar condos and Oak Ridge apartments and to promote the concept of Greenbelt One,” among several other endeavors, said CDCG board member Aileen Kroll. According to CDCG co-founder John Buck, the concept of Greenbelt One is to “help mend the divide that exists between Greenbelt East and Old Greenbelt.”

The fourth official Greenbriar community meeting took place on Saturday, January 27 at the Greenbriar Community Center, “under the auspices of CDCG and supported by a city project grant,” said Kroll. There were presentations by community group leaders, Cathy Jones, president of the Friends of the Old Greenbelt Theatre and volunteer coordinator; Carolyn Lambright-Davis and Maggie Cahalan of CHEARS; Wunmi Okupe of GEMZ; and Liz Park, executive director of CARES/GAIL. Each representative elaborated on the developments and mission of their organizations. For more information, consult the websites of each organization: greenbelt-theatre.org, cheers.org, makemeagem.org, and greenbeltnmd.gov for CARES and GAIL. CDCG has been working with all of these groups, using their approach to maximize their effectiveness and enhance communication within and with other Greenbelt groups.

Said Kroll, the Greenbriar Residents Outreach Group offered presentations on several subjects including free and low-cost transportation, free food and clothing venues, legal/financial options, language and cultural issues and AARP/pending legislation. Also discussed were low-cost and free UMD bus, tuition-free state university classes for those 60+, and the Community Supported Agriculture (CSA) program at the New Deal Café. For more information about the Greenbriar Community Outreach Group, contact Angeline Butler at mollytops1@gmail.com.

Kroll said “new groups were formed to explore the possibility of having a part-time CARES/GAIL satellite office on-site, to create resident tours of Greenbelt and to create a document” with information on all available services.

Angeline Butler, president of Greenbriar Phase Three, has worked closely with CDCG on this project. She was “very impressed” by the fact that CDCG “gets results.” She felt that the approach “involves and respects people,” that the process works and participants are enthusiastic. She saw an encouraging pattern of consistent goal-setting and completion. Butler echoed the observation that many Greenbriar residents have “no clue what’s available” and sees CDCG as a vehicle to change that.

Other Greenbelt groups that CDCG is currently assisting are the Old Greenbelt Theatre, Beloved Community Interfaith Network, Peace Action Group and the Greenbelt Time Bank.

Said Kroll, “We have offered basic and advanced training workshops, follow-up and consultation services” to all of these groups. CDCG works to empower Greenbelt community members and groups by teaching and sharing an enlightened governance approach called Dynamic Community Governance (DCG). DCG focuses on transparent and consent-based interactions, resulting in energized meetings, the valuing of different perspectives and a streamlined decision-making process. Because people feel heard and valued and because matters get addressed and resolved, participation and productivity increases.”

DCG was first introduced to Greenbelt in 2013. For more information, contact Aileen Kroll at aileen@dynamic-governance.org.

And, of course, digitizing the footage also gives folks their memories in a format they could pull up on a laptop and share with families and friends, a win-win all around, McGrath agreed.

With a grant from the Greenbelt Community Foundation, McGrath plumbed some good friends in the film and archive industry including Skip Elsheimer and his wife Katrina, who run The A/V Geeks, a film digitization and stock footage (and related) business based in Raleigh, N.C. Although digital conversion is their business, they often spend weekends in other cities helping to host other home movie digitization events like the one here last weekend. McGrath also tapped Siobhan Hagan of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Moving Image Archive (MARMIA), based in Baltimore, and Chuck Howell, a librarian and former archivist at the University of Maryland, who still has the equipment and skills for cleaning, inspecting and repairing old 8- and 16-mm film.

McGrath brought this team together in space provided by the MakerSpace to set up shop for two days with various film projectors, movie recorders, splicing equipment and laptops.

People who had signed up in half-hour time slots – the event was advertised via the Friends of the Greenbelt Theatre email list – brought 8- and 16-mm tape reels, Super8 cassettes, VHS and Betamax tapes. They sat down at one or more of the appropriate workstations, depending on film format, and instantly – because they were able to re-watch the footage as it was converted – were transported back in time as they reminisced about vacations in Italy or Maine, Christmas with mom or just kids and backyard shenanigans. And it was clearly contagious.

“This is why we do this,” Katrina said. “We love the stories that come out as people view their old movies.” More about MARMIA can be found on their website, marmia.org. More about film transfer and digitization services by the A/V Geeks LLC can be found at avgeeks.com.

New Highway Marker Dedicated March 3

“We’re not even in the actual planning stage yet,” he said.

They hope to make a decision on the site in 2019, following an environmental assessment. Ideally, construction would begin in 2021. In 2023 they would start a multi-year process of transitioning production lines to the new site.

Right now the federal officials are reaching out informally to communities and have met with the Prince George’s County Council.

“We want to be good neighbors,” Davis said. “We don’t want to go where we’re not wanted.”

BEP@BARC?

The Department of Agriculture is supportive of BEP’s developing a 100-acre site at BARC. The 100 acres would include a substantial security buffer, which is a critical item lacking at the downtown location. The facilities themselves would occupy about 900,000 square feet, to be constructed on the former poultry research site between Powder Mill and Odell Roads, an area that comprises less than two percent of BARC’s 6,500 acres.

BEP would remove approximately 23 abandoned buildings on the site, ranging from chicken coops to two-story buildings and research laboratories that have not been in use since the 1990s. BEP will also deal with the known and unknown environmental hazards on the site, including, at a minimum, asbestos and lead paint. These are structures that BARC has needed to tear down and which are a considerable drain on BARC’s budget and facilities.

BEP Seeks Brown Site

Davis stressed that an important component of the project, wherever it ends up happening, is that they would build in an area informally known as a brown site. That means it is not forest, woodlands or farmland but rather is a site that has previously been developed. He noted that all the sites they are currently considering are on federal property where they can repurpose existing land and facilities rather than building or starting anew.

Storm water would be controlled onsite, and air and waste water would be treated onsite prior to discharge. They anticipate sharing utility resources with BARC, including electricity, water and waste disposal services.

Building height is expected to be low (25 to 35 feet) and structures would not be visible from Edmonston Road. Access would likely be from Powder Mill Road. BEP would pay for any road improvements or necessary upgrades to the intersection at Powder Mill and Edmonston.

Discussion

Councilmember Judith Davis asked Zhang how many buildings are on the campus. He said there are 512 buildings, with only 260 in active use.

“Our operating costs have increased. Our budget has not,” Zhang said. “We once had 1,400 employees. We now have about 800.”

The facility would require an 800-space parking lot, which could possibly be an above ground garage. Chuck Davis noted they have staggered shifts for employees coming and going to work, which reduces the impact on traffic. Councilmember Davis encouraged them to consider using shuttles from the Metro Station. Mayo said they would definitely do that, adding that this is another area where they will enhance and share existing services at BARC.

Protecting BARC

Chuck Davis said they strongly believe that something needs to be done about the BARC property and that the presence of another federal agency on the site, which increases use and decreases costs, is the best bet for protecting BARC.

Councilmember Rodney Roberts said he would still rather have a farm on the property and limit it to agricultural research. He was also concerned about having an industrial use on the site and asked Chuck Davis what they will do with waste water. Davis replied that they recycle almost all of their water and were already required to meet these standards in their existing location. BARC also has its own water treatment facility.

In addition to having many staff who are science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) professionals, BEP also has training programs for the highly skilled workers it needs. Chuck Davis pointed out that engravers, for example, are artists who go through a long training period, and the training for their printers and trade workers is very specialized. He stressed that one of the reasons they need to be selective about their site is that they need to have access to the right workforce. He added that another attraction of the BARC location is that more than half of BEP’s employees live in Maryland and, of those, 44 percent reside in Prince George’s County. Councilmember Davis said she hoped they would work with the local community colleges and high schools to develop training programs. Chuck Davis said they were interested in doing so and had previous contact with some of the county schools.

Mayor Emmett Jordan remarked that there would continue to be concerns regarding the impact on the environment, traffic and roads. Acting Director of Planning Terri Hruby and Advisory Planning Board (APB) Chair Brian Gibbons were present at the meeting, and Jordan asked them if they had any comments. Hruby said she recognized the potential benefit of having a federal agency undertake redevelopment within the BARC campus. She agreed with Jordan that there are serious concerns remaining to be addressed, but she said there appear to be many opportunities in this plan as well.

Gibbons said the APB has not yet discussed the proposal and that they, too, would want to look carefully at environmental, traffic and parking issues. He added that this is a completely different approach than he has seen previously to looking at how to use this land and as such it is intriguing if also potentially controversial. Gibbons also raised the issue of Bitcoin and other digital and cryptocurrencies, asking Chuck Davis if BEP is convinced it will need such a large footprint in the future. Davis replied that the U.S. dollar is the official bank note worldwide and underlies the world’s economy, not just that of the U.S. He said they are confident it will not disappear anytime soon.

Resident Bill Orleans expressed indignation that the city council seemed to be weakening on its long-held public position that there should be no use other than by BARC on that property. He said even if the land is not all in use now, it should be reserved for agricultural research in the event that greater need would return in the future.

Councilmember Davis said, “When I first heard about this, I nearly went ballistic.” She said BARC is part of the city’s green belt and she wants it to stay agricultural, but she is not quite as opposed as she was before. She is open to considering the plan because she is now thinking that the most important thing is not to let BARC be sold off, either in whole or in part.

Mayo replied to that sentiment, saying BARC, too, wants to maintain the character of the BARC campus and thinks BEP would be a good partner and would share that vision.

Another potential benefit occurred to the mayor, who asked whether it might be feasible to set up a solar farm on some of BARC’s “brown land,” which could benefit both BARC and the city. Zhang replied that while there were only some forms in which that would work for BARC “they were open to discussing possibilities.”

Zhang concluded their presentation by saying he wanted it to be clear that BARC’s leadership team supports this project. He said they find the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to be a compatible partner, with highly trained staff who will share their resources.

“We cannot afford the operation long term,” Zhang said, “and this plan will reduce the burden on BARC and enable us to conduct more research. We see this as a positive direction.”

The students’ school year will begin on September 4 and should end (subject to weather or other factors) on June 14. The complete calendar is now on the board’s website at pgcps.org/2018-2019-calendar-as-grid/.

As required by Maryland law, students must attend 180 days of school each year. Since Governor Larry Hogan decided school must be closed between June 15 and Labor Day, spring break may be curtailed if bad weather closes schools for more than the three make-up days built into the calendar.

Events will not be scheduled on holidays noted on the calendar with an asterisk (*), due to Jewish and Muslim holidays which begin the previous day at sunset. This restriction does not apply to state or regional events.

After reviewing two draft calendars at its February 1 meeting, the approved version was supported by more than 75 percent of parents and employees who took the 2018-19 School Calendar Survey.

a specified purpose, such as construction. The approved easement granted 0.813 acres of state land for construction and the development of the trail, according to Terri Hruby, the city’s assistant planning director.

Plans and approval for the connection of the designated bike and trail system with the new housing development also passed through the Department of General Services and the Maryland Department of the Environment, according to the mayor’s letter to the senator.

Jessica Bellah, of the city’s Department of Planning and Community Development, sent a letter containing an easement request and projected sentiment similar to the mayor’s letter to a contact at the Maryland Department of Planning’s Clearinghouse and Communications to highlight the benefits of the planned trail addition. This letter was sent in October 2016.

Support for the construction of the bridge came from Greenbelt residents and the advocacy group CCRIC (Citizens to Conserve and Restore Indian Creek). CCRIC has taken interest in development projects to ensure the protection of the environment of the area. Development proposals for areas near Indian Creek have been the focus for CCRIC; its members argued against a plan for a mall in the late 1990s, which would have dammed up Indian Creek, according to one member.

Three Greenbelt Schools Join in Project Tutor

by Matthew Arbach

Ashley Arrey, a senior at Eleanor Roosevelt High School, helps fourth grader Bailey Bernhard with math.

Tutor Chris Daniel Person, age 17, was nervous when he met with his first student. “Nervous because I didn’t want to give the kids the wrong info but after a while I was able to push that to the side and give them valuable information.” Now, he says, “I can’t wait to interact with the kids more.”

Person is part of Project Tutor: Guardians of Greenbelt, which is under the auspices of the non-profit group The Better Place, Inc. (TBPI), a program established in 2014. It is an “extension of the Art, Literature, Leadership Initiative’s student service program at Greenbelt Middle School (GMS),” said Cortland Jones, CEO of TBPI. He further explained this is the “leadership component with an emphasis on academic enrichment character education and community service.”

With Project Tutor, Jones was looking to create guardians, the Latin meaning of the word tutor. Started on January 20 and supported by a grant from the Greenbelt Community Foundation the mission is to train mainly 6th to 12th grade students to be tutors to students at Springhill Lake Elementary School, Greenbelt Elementary School and GMS during the 2017-2018 school year. Adults are also welcome to the training.

Jones is supported by Christopher W. Person, Project Tutor Program director; Judy Hering, vocational and educational counselor from CARES; and currently, five tutors: Sylvia Boswell, an adult volunteer and retired elementary teacher; and ERHS students Chris and Ashley Person, Asheley Arrey and Arsalan Siddiqui.

For Jones, the guiding approach is in “creating an interactive, non-threatening learning environment that makes practical learning strategies fun and engaging.” He saw a need to help Greenbelt students rise academically in math and reading and improve their scores on standardized tests. The goal was to “improve self-esteem” and foster confidence in taking examinations.

Project Tutor operates on Saturdays from 1 to 3 p.m. at the Greenbelt Library (run by Person) and on Tuesdays from 2 to 5 p.m. at Springhill Lake (SHL) Clubhouse with Hering and Person. At this time, 10 students are receiving instruction with Project Tutor.

One GMS 6th grader, Fiona Sorenson, said “I was happy about the tutoring because the people are nice and I have learned a lot.”

CARES also offers tutoring on Thursdays from 2 to 5 p.m. and drop-in group tutoring on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to noon, all at the SHL Clubhouse.

Hering explained that “tutors and students are matched based on their academic expertise and interest in a specific age/grade student.”

Said Ashley Person, the program “has come a long way and has grown into a place to provide guidance to the kids being tutored, but also the tutors themselves. I am proud to be a part of this program and I can’t wait to see the future accomplishments.”

Jones said that “with continued funding and volunteer support the goal is to run 12-week sessions during summer (June through August), fall (October through December) and winter (February through April) annually.”

Jones has been a teacher in Prince George’s County schools for 25 years. He has experience as an art/graphic design teacher and as a peer meditation coordinator at the middle/high school grade level.

For more information on Project Tutor, contact Chris Person at chriswperson@yahoo.com.

A Chili Evening

New Deal Café Chili Cook-off For Members and Friends

by Jennifer Moser Jurling

When Kim Messer invited me to a Chili cookoff at the New Deal Café on Monday, February 12, I was not expecting to become a judge. Messer, the front-of-house manager, organized the cook-off as a party for New Deal Café staff, co-op members and friends of the Café. (I am a regular patron, but not a member.)

Messer told me that Chef Carrie Megginson made chili at the last staff and member party, and conversation turned to chili in general. That’s when they hatched the idea of a potluck-style chili cook-off “where Chef couldn’t cook,” Messer said.

“Except the cornbread, and the salad, and the brownies,” Chef Carrie added.

Four people brought vegetarian chili for the cookoff, and there were five meat varieties. The back room of the Café was festively decorated, and about 40 people enjoyed the camaraderie and the refreshments. Just before the group was invited to eat, Messer served the judges chili in ramekins, with a separate spoon for each one. She needed one group of judges to taste the meat recipes, and another group to sample the vegetarian version.

“You’re vegetarian, aren’t you, Jenny?” she said as I stood by the chili table. I agreed that I mostly do eat vegetarian, though I’m flexible.

Soon, I was seated at a table before three white ramekins of vegetarian chili, rating each one on aroma, flavor, creativity and texture on a scale of 1 to 5. They ranged from sweet and mild to smoky and complex. (The fourth vegetarian entrant was a late arrival. I tasted it later. It was spicy.)

To my left, two other judges tasted vegetarian chili; to my right, other judges rated the meat group.

When the scores were tabulated, Messer announced that Jessamyn Strebs had won first place for her white chicken chili (featuring white beans, chicken, garlic and onions, with no tomatoes). Jsun Maggio won second place for his five-bean vegan chili with corn and a meat substitute. Both of their chili recipes included beer as an ingredient.

Maggio has been involved with the New Deal Café since 2004. He first bartended, he says, but now he’s a supporter and patron. The secret spice in his chili was chipotle. How did he decide to enter the chili cookoff?

“My chili was featured as a special sometimes, before Chef Carrie came in,” he said, but that level of expertise wasn’t required of competitors.

“I’m not really a chili maker,” said Strebs, but she experimented to create her winning recipe. She attributes her success to her awesome green chili powder from New Mexico. Strebs also advises that, if your chili recipe includes two cans of beans, you mash half of one can with a potato masher and then stir it into the chili, to improve the texture.

At the New Deal Café, Strebs is “a server extraordinaire,” says café member Alan Zambreny. He also brought chili and toppings for the cook-off. Zambreny says he spends more time at the Café than he does at home, and that the Café is “full of friends you haven’t met yet.”

Amethyst Dwyer, the bar manager and music coordinator, says that she thinks of the New Deal

Café as the Greenbelt community’s “third place,” according to Ray Oldenburg’s model of community. Your “first place” is home, your “second place” is your workplace, and your “third place” is the welcoming social center where you can connect with others.

Two other longtime Café members commented that the New Deal Café is “struggling to recover from a difficult transition that began in late 2016.” Chef Carrie’s arrival with a new menu has improved business, but the Café hasn’t fully recovered and shouldn’t be taken for granted. Still, they are optimistic that the New Deal Café can survive if it receives continuing and increasing community support. Since its founding 22 years ago, “we’ve weathered many storms, and will weather this storm too.”
